Happy with school schedules? WUSD wants to know

Local school district is exploring whether to change -- or even standardize -- local school calendars

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Washington Unified School District is beginning discussion of possible new instruction schedules for local schools, reports Superintendent Stu Greenfeld. But the discussion is just beginning, and a decision has not yet been made whether school schedules even need to be changed, he stressed.

Among the ideas to be explored is a proposal to put all local students on the same schedule – a "modified traditional" schedule which could replace the mixture of "traditional" schedules at most school sites and a "multi-track" system at Golden State Middle School.

"I want to assure people we haven't agreed to make any changes," Greenfeld told the News-Ledger yesterday. "We are looking at making possible changes on the school schedule. We are having discussions about it. We want to engage the community in discussions about going off the multi-track schedule (at GSMS)."

A recently-proposed outline of a "modified traditional schedule" has been circulated to parents of Golden State Middle School students. The schedule shows the school year being broken down into four instructional periods of roughly 45 days each. Between them are vacation periods from Sept. 30 to Oct. 11; Dec. 21 to Jan. 5; March 17 to March 28; and in June and most of July.

Currently at GSMS, students are divided into different "tracks" which bring them to school on different academic calendars. This "multi-track" system was implemented to help the school deal with overcrowding.

"Originally, it was due to a facilities issue," said Greenfeld. "You get about a 20 percent increase in capacity of you go to multi-track. But now that the sixth graders have been removed from the middle school and brought back to the elementary schools, Golden State can handle a single track again."

That would help eliminate some inherent unfairness that comes with the current multi-track system, said Greenfeld. Different "tracks" of kids at GSMS have different academic opportunities, depending on their timing.

"Because of the multi-track system, not all the kids have equal access to the core curriculum. And only one track has access to the music program. There's a real need to have equal access across the tracks."

Greenfeld added that he is interested in looking at getting all the district's schools on the same calendar to help families that have kids at different schools.

"There are family issues," he said. "Students in the same family need to have vacations at the same time, and so forth."

Anyone interested on sharing their views on the instructional calendar can speak to the school board at tomorrow night's board meeting (7 p.m.; 930 Westacre Rd.) or can address the board at any of its next several meetings.

"They can also attend the parent meetings at the individual school sites," said Greenfeld.

Patty Yamat, president of the local teachers' union, has not returned a pair of News-Ledger phone calls regarding WUSD instructional issues.

Linden Rd. cul-de-sac? Lake Washington Blvd. overpass? City seeks railroad crossing solution

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Developers and city officials will have to deal with a Public Utilities Commission policy against new at-grade railroad crossings if home building in the east Linden Rd. area of West Sacramento is to continue.

"The PUC's position is we have to close another crossing to open a new one," said Steve Patek, the city's planning director. "Our intent has been to extend Lake Washington Blvd. near the Pheasant Club across the field, over the railroad tracks and into Newport Lakes and other developments. Those developments were approved with the condition that only 350 homes of their homes could be served by Linden Rd.

A total of about 1,000 homes, though, are on the drawing boards of Newport Lakes and other developments just north of Linden and west of the Sacramento River. That means they need to be provided with another way to Jefferson Blvd. – and across the Yolo Shortline's north-south railroad tracks.

The PUC's staff position is that West Sacramento can't simply build an extension of Lake Washington Blvd. across the existing railroad tracks and into the new subdivisions, though. First, it must close the existing railroad crossing serving older neighborhoods on Linden Road – essentially turning Linden into a cul-de-sac and re-routing traffic from current homeowners to South River Road or to the proposed new Lake Washington Blvd. approach to Jefferson.

Or, the city could build an above-grade railroad crossing on an extension of Lake Washington Blvd. – to the tune of about $10 million, guessed Patek.

Or, the city could give up plans to create a new railroad crossing, and simply force new homeowners and old homeowners to share Linden Road.

THE CURRENT railroad crossing on Linden Rd. just east of Jefferson Blvd. serves residents of the Linden East subdivision. But the Public Utilities Commission -- at least for the moment -- won't let West Sacramento create a new crossing nearby as long as this one stays open. That creates a problem for planned new development.

"There's always been concerns by residents of Linden not to let that road become an arterial," cautioned Patek. "Also, most of the new development is north of Linden, so doing that would force most drivers to come south, then use Linden Road to Jefferson, and then go north again."

So for the present, West Sacramento staff will concentrate on trying to get the PUC's staff to change its mind, and simply allow West Sacramento to build a second railroad crossing near the present one."They have taken a hard-line policy that there will be no new at-grade crossings (anywhere)," said Patek. "If you want a new one, you'll have to close an old one."

If the city can't convince PUC staff to make an exception, said Patek, it might be forced to use the PUC's appeal process. But that could delay home building until the problem is resolved.

"We're told the appeal process takes about 18 months," he said.

Hundreds join in fundraiser for Venditti

By Daryl Fisher
Features Editor

On September 8th, a spaghetti dinner fundraiser was held at the River City High School cafeteria on behalf of 1998 RCHS graduate Tony Venditti, who tragically lost the use of his arms and legs in an automobile accident earlier this year. In addition to a wonderful spaghetti dinner, which was donated by the Olive Garden of Citrus Heights, there was also music, raffles, the sale of t-shirts and pins, a video showing just what a special person Tony is, and plenty of hugging and renewing of old friendships.

"All of us were very touched by the community support at the spaghetti dinner," said Charlie Grandinetti, a member of 'Tony's Angels', a group of family and friends who have organized to help raise funds for Tony's current and future care.

"Our goal was to provide an opportunity for the community to join together to learn about Tony's progress, celebrate how far he's come, and to lesson the financial burden placed on Carolyn, Tony's mom. The fundraiser was more successful than any of us had imagined. Tony's awesome friends and family pulled together and made it happen. Looking across the room and seeing over 200 people celebrating Tony's life was breathtaking. Tony touched and continues to touch many lives, and Carolyn was truly blessed by the outpouring of support for her and Tony."

Grandinetti added that there will be more fundraisers on behalf of Tony in the future, and that Tony plans on attending the next event himself. To receive updates on Tony's condition or learn of upcoming fundraisers, you can visit Tony's website at www.TonyV98.com.

Port, Coast Guard tighten security

Authorized recreational boaters return following scare

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Many boaters and other visitors to the Port of Sacramento had to alter their plans two weeks ago, as the port responded to a Coast Guard directive that all ports re-evaluate their security procedures in the aftermath of the Sept. 11 bombings on the U.S. East Coast.

The limited shut-down did not affect shipping at the Port of Sacramento, said port traffic manager Steve Mathis, and licensed recreational users of the port's facilities are once again being allowed inside.

"Due to the concerns about terrorism, the Coast Guard contacted all ports throughout the U.S. and said we needed to beef up security and get them copies of our security plan," said Mathis. "We've done that, and we're allowing normal traffic into the port. If the level of people goes up so much that the attention goes down, we will once again close it."

Mathis said that new precautions include a requirement for photo identification of visitors.

"The Coast Guard wants us to have a photo ID of everyone who comes in," he said. "Visitors should have a prior appointment and a business purpose for their visit."

For several days, hundreds of sailors, rowers, and recreational fishermen were turned away at the gate.

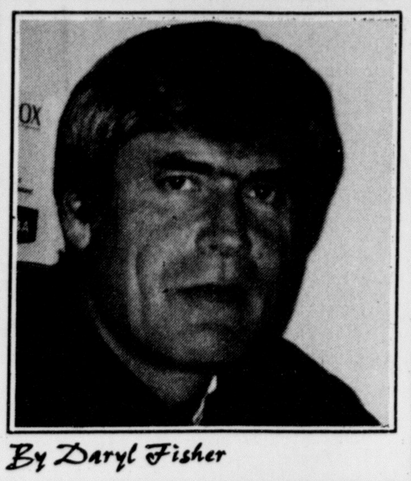

"We are now letting these individuals with a license to use the port back in, including the (River City) rowing club, the UC Davis Crew Club, the Lake Washington Sailing Club and the outboard club," said Mathis.

"Also, the Coast Guard and Coast Guard Auxiliary will be from time to time patrolling these waters. There were rumors that the Coast Guard was kicking people out of the port (following the terrorist attack). What I understand those rumors came from was that if people were spending time at the docks, the Coast Guard was coming over and telling them to get away from the docks. If someone were to want to cause trouble, it would be easy for them to 'set something up' under the docks."

The Port of Sacramento is located in West Sacramento near Industrial and Harbor boulevards.

It's always good to remember: crime never pays

My Back Pages

By Daryl Fisher

It turns out that criminals aren't always the brightest human beings on the face of the earth and here are a few recent examples of what I mean:

1. A thin, nervous looking man made his way into a drug store, rushed up to the checkout counter, and suddenly pulled out a gun and aimed it at the clerk's chest. It seemed like forever before he managed to get the words out, but he finally shouted, "This is a holdup! Just do as I say and no one will get hurt." Then he pulled out a Hefty-bag face mask and put it over his head. The only problem was that he had forgotten to put eye holes in the mask.

2. A pair of Michigan robbers entered a record shop and began waving revolvers around. They ordered everyone to stop what they were doing and gather in the center of the room. As employees and customers scrambled to do as they had been told, one of the robbers shouted, "Nobody move!" When his partner suddenly moved, the startled first bandit shot him.

3. A man in Indiana walked into a grocery store, grabbed a cart and began strolling up and down the isles. When his cart was almost full, he got in line at the checkout counter and patiently waited his turn. To make sure everyone around him considered him to be nothing more than just another ordinary grocery shopper, he took out his wallet and placed it on the counter so he would have his identification all ready when it came time for him to write out a check. But as the cashier began to ring up his groceries, the man suddenly pulled out a gun and demanded all the money in the register. The frightened clerk immediately did as he had been told and quickly handed over the loot. The robber grabbed all the money, shoved it into a coat pocket, and raced out of the store, leaving his wallet (which had his driver's license and other identification in it) on the counter.

4. A man who apparently wasn't very good at math walked into a Circle-K (a convenience store similar to 7-11), put a $20 bill on the counter and asked the clerk for change. When the clerk opened up the cash drawer, the man suddenly pulled out a gun and demanded all the cash in the register, which the scared clerk promptly provided. Then the robber then took the cash from the clerk and fled, leaving behind the $20 bill he had placed on the counter. The total amount of money the clerk had handed over to the robber turned out to be less than $15, leaving the robber $5 in the hole.

5. A not-too-bright thief successfully managed to break into the basement of a bank through a small street-level window. In the process, however, the glass was shattered and the bandit cut himself up pretty badly. Once inside the building, it suddenly dawned on him that (1) he could not get to the bank vault which contained all the money from where he was; (2) that he could not climb back out of the window through which he had entered without cutting himself even worse; (3) and that if he didn't get some medical attention pretty quickly, he was probably going to bleed to death from his wounds. He finally decided to call off the robbery, found a telephone, and dialed "911" for help.

6. A German "tourist" who was supposedly on a golf holiday was stopped by suspicious English police when he showed up at customs with a very heavy golf bag. While making idle chatter about golf, one of the customs officials, who had been playing the game for years, realized the tourist didn't know what he was talking about when he mentioned to him that he had an 8 handicap. The suspicious official then asked the tourist to demonstrate his golf swing for him. The tourist gladly complied, but swung the club backwards. The custom official then ordered a complete check of the tourist's golf bag and found it full of illegal narcotics.

7. In Arizona a company calling itself "Guns for Hire" stages very realistic looking gunfights for Western movies and other entertainment events. One day they received a call from a 47-year old woman who wanted to meet with one of their representatives to discuss using their services. When one of the company's salesperson arrived at her home, he was informed by the woman that she wanted her husband killed and that price was not a problem. The woman got 4 1/2 years in jail.

8. And finally, two men tried to pull the front off of a cash machine by running a chain from the machine to the bumper of their pickup truck. But instead of pulling the front panel off the machine, they only managed to pull the back bumper off of their truck. Scared, they immediately fled the scene of the crime and drove straight home, leaving behind the chain, which was still attached to the machine, and their bumper, which was still attached to the chain. When the police arrived at their door less than an hour later, it suddenly dawned on the robbers that their vehicle license plate was also still attached to the bumper.

SPORTS INSIDER

By Richard Novoa

Barry Bonds crushed his 67th home run of the season on Monday night to pull the San Francisco Giants within 1 ½ games of the division leading Diamondbacks. The Giants 2-1 win over the Dodgers also put them only two games back of the Cardinals for the wild card spot with 11 games remaining.

Bonds needs three home runs to tie Mark McGwire's 1998 record of 70 homers. If the Giants players start hitting and can put together a modest winning streak Bonds could break the record on the last day of the season against the Dodgers. The Giants lineup hasn't been hitting lately and opposing teams are been issuing Bonds intentional walks.

The Giants will play two more games in Los Angeles before they head back to Pac Bell Park for a three game weekend series against the Padres. The A's are home this week against the Angels and then will travel to Seattle for a three game series with the division leaders.

The Oakland A's clinched the wild card spot and are selling playoff tickets for game one on Wednesday, October 10th and game two which is scheduled for October 11th. Tickets are available over the Internet with game times to be determined at a later date.

The commissioner of baseball delayed the start of the World Series to Oct. 27 in a new postseason schedule that was announced Friday, this means the October Classic will end around November 4th, unless a team sweeps. Baseball in November, I love it!

The NBA season is just around the corner as training camps prepare for their pre-season games. The NBA has canceled all pre-season games that were scheduled to be played outside of the United States. The NBA was set to play exhibition games in Asia, Europe and Mexico. Looks like MJ is making a comeback with the Washington Wizards. Jordan has reportedly sold his interest in the Wizards and is ready to lace up the Air Jordan's. Just in case your interested, the Wizards will play Kings at the Arco Arena on February 14th.

Don't miss the big TVKO Pay-Per-View (6 p.m.) boxing show this Saturday, September 29th from Madison Square Garden in New York featuring the undefeated WBA champion, Felix Trinidad (40-0, 30 KO's) and the IBF and WBC middleweight champion, Bernard Hopkins (39-2-1, 28 KO's) for the undisputed Middleweight title. These two warriors are not the best of friends, especially after Hopkins disrespected Trinidad's country and the Puerto Rican flag at the press conference last month. Don't miss the first round!

Both Bay Area NFL football teams suffered losses in the second week of the NFL season. The 49ers lost 30-26 to the Rams and Raiders lost a heartbreaking last second game to the Dolphins in Miami. This week the Raiders will host the Seattle Seahawks (1:15 p.m.) while the 49ers travel to New York for a Monday night game against the Jets.

This week I improved my weekly NFL picks with 2 wins and 1 loss but I lost the Monday night game again bringing my season total to respectable (.500) with 3 wins and 3 losses. This week I like the New York Giants (-3) at home against the Saints and the Rams (-5 ½) over the Dolphins in St. Louis.

On Monday night I'll take the 49ers (+3 ½) and the points against the Jets.

See ya next week!

This past Saturday, September 18, an overflow assembly of more than 200 family, friends and acquaintances gathered at West Sacramento's River Cities Funeral Chapel to attend a memorial service for Jacob A. Misfeldt, whose obituary appears in today's News-Ledger. A community resource for many years, Misfeldt worked tirelessly for the buy-out of the privately owned water system and was a principal moved in helping to establish the present local city government, and at no time sought any reward or public office for his labors.

Attendees at the memorial service heard of Misfeldt's many educational accomplishments and public services, and indeed the list of his endeavors is monumental. Foremost among his value to the entire community was his availability at all times; he was the close personal friend and politically familiar associate of the late Julius A. Feher, founding editor and publisher of this newspaper, for an astounding period of forty-nine years.

For the past few years Jake enjoyed his retirement and kept a rather low profile but his passing has a left a deep hole in this community and he will be sorely missed. If one expects to find a memorial to Jake Misfeldt, just look around: it is here, it is the City of West Sacramento, for all to see and forever enjoy. Our city is his enduring legacy.

TOURING with TEDDI

Less than one hour away is the historical area of Folsom.

As you walk down Sutter St., your eyes focus on the large granite gas lights that fall softly on the old Wells Fargo Assay office and Pony Express terminus, now a museum. As you stroll the tree-shaded streets and cross flower-strewn malls, the echoes of forgotten noises fall soft upon your senses. The clip-clop of horses' hooves, the rumbling carts and carriages, the smell of tack and hitches. The voices thick with accents.

Is that the succulent aroma of oatmeal cookies and gingerbread men wafting past your nostrils, making your mouth water in anticipation? As you walk down Sutter Street, it's easy to imagine children rolling hoops down the street, stopping to purchase candied apples and licorice sticks at one of the shops. Elegant ladies in leghorn hats and gentlemen with spats and canes sit on a balcony, while men in cowboy hats and boots drink a frosty mug of ice-cold beer in the local hotel.

Hanging baskets, dried floral arrangements, and festooned floral carts adorn the sidewalks. The windowpanes reflect a thousand sparkling prisms in a myriad of colors from beveled and stained glass, china, bisque, Tiffany lamps, jade and carnival glass. Victorian clocks, sofas, and armoires remind you that the old things are the best.

Silver, gold, Eureka! The cry that launched Folsom into history and the annals of gutsy men and women who gambled and won. Historic Sutter St. in Folsom has had a second crop of courageous pioneers, who refused to see the street pass quietly into history. They have made it a living, breathing part of the Old West, alive and well today. Once again, your children can enjoy ice cream sodas, homemade cookies and candies, and thrill to the doll shops and miniatures. You can find precious jade, Indian and antique jewelry, and interior decorators will delight in the many antique stores and art galleries.

At Christmas-time, the entire street is lit with luminarios – truly a sight to see. Spend the day; it's family fun, with everything you could wish for in a living, breathing, not-so-ghost town. Folsom: "where the west came and stayed."

Next Wednesday, we are off to the many delights of Napa Valley!

One of the oldest restaurants in Sacramento (over 32 years!), the Buggy Whip has proven the theory that if you give good service and serve good food, the public will come. Proprietor Larry LeSieur is proud to carry on a family tradition started by his father, Andre. The Buggy Whip has a beautiful banquet room for parties of up to 150 people – perfect for a wedding or anniversary party. Like all good restaurateurs, Larry is always on the scene, many times tending bar for his formidable group of regulars.

The Whip's luncheon specials range in price from $8.95 to $10.95, and the portions are huge, and you get soup or salad as well as a roll and butter with all the specials. The diversified menu features teriyaki beef brochettes, as well as seafood and the famous Buggy Whip steak sandwich. If salad is your bag, try the stuffed avocado with crab or shrimp ($8.95). There is a fresh catch of the day everyday, as well as deep fried prawns, hamburgers, South of the Border burritos and tacos – truly a Catholic (universal) menu.

For those of you who come from the East Coast, Larry has an authentic New York cheesecake, plus a fresh daily-made dessert. All in all, I can say is if you like a congenial atmosphere, good food, and good service, try the Buggy Whip, only 15 minutes across the bridge between Marconi and El Camino Avenues. Lunch is served Monday through Friday from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. Dinner is served nightly.

A New Way To Look At Your Waistline

(NAPS)—New treatment guidelines on weight management, from the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute (NHLBI) point to the importance of waist circumference in assessing the health risks associated with obesity.

Research has consistently shown that people who have excess weight around their middle, or those with an "apple-shaped" body, have a higher risk of certain chronic disorders, such as type 2 diabetes and cardiovascular disease (CVD). In a recent survey of more than 9,500 Americans, obesity was associated with higher rates of chronic medical problems and a poorer quality of life than was alcohol abuse, smoking and poverty.

According to the NHLBI, men with a waist circumference greater than 40 inches are at an increased relative risk for CVD. For women, the risk increases with a waist circumference greater than 35 inches.

A study conducted at the National Institutes of Health funded-New York Obesity Center, found that participants following the 1,200 calorie Scan Diet weight loss program over twelve weeks decreased their waist circumference by more than 2.5 inches. These participants lost an average of 16 pounds and statistically lowered their LDL or "bad" cholesterol, an additional benefit in the fight against CVD.

New NHLBI Treatment Guidelines
Waist Circumference	Category
(Men) greater than 40 inches	Increased risk
(Women) greater than 35 inches	Increased risk

"Because excess abdominal fat is an independent risk factor for disease, measuring a patient's waist circumference is an important part of assessing their health," said David B. Allison, Ph.D., University of Alabama at Birmingham and lead investigator of the Scan Diet study. "Waist circumference measurement is especially useful for assessing the health risks of patients who look mildly overweight."

To improve your overall health and reduce your risk of chronic disorders, don't just look at what the scale is telling you. See your healthcare provider and devise a plan for better health that includes exercise and a balanced diet.

For additional information on weight management, waist circumference and body mass index, visit the NHLBI at www.nhlbi.nih.gov/index.htm or www.scandiet.com.

Wiring For Today's Home

(NAPS)—When purchasing a new home, most consumers are in the dark about what kind of wiring infrastructure is in place before they buy.

Homebuyers should ask their realtor about a house's wiring before agreeing to the purchase.

Yesterday's wiring infrastructure was not designed with today's electronic lifestyles in mind. Old-school wiring was meant to support one or two phones and a television. Homebuyers today demand both higher speed capability and greater flexibility for Internet connections, home office and home entertainment locations, and remotely managed security/energy management systems.

Homebuyers can prevent future headaches with a little up-front knowledge about proper wiring. Homebuyers should ask the builder and realtor about the wiring in a prospective new home before agreeing to purchase.

Modern structured wiring (or network wiring) uses two category 5e cables, two RG-6 quad shielded coax cables, and the proper low voltage outlets where telephones, TVs and computers would go. Network wiring facilitates the use of fax machines, PCs, security, and home entertainment systems, keeping today's homes current with today's technology.

OPINION

News-Ledger Editorial:

Those clever speculators

West Sacramento's school district this month voted its support for the controversial development of agricultural land in Placer County. But the matter was more routine that it sounds.

One of the tricks used by developers and land speculators to win development rights, and to circumvent local planning efforts, is to include a "bribe" in their development plan.

This "bribe" doesn't necessarily take the form of a few dollars slipped into somebody's pocket (or, more legally, into some public official's war chest). Instead, it can be an offer of some kind of donation to some powerful constituency of the community. It can be an offer to do good.

In West Sacramento, we can recall one developer offering to build a much-needed bridge if a certain industrial park won approval. Or we can think back to an occasion when backers of a local casino project waved big dollars at a local seniors' group in an effort to bring aboard the seniors' vocal support.

Now, in Placer County, developer Angelo Tsakopoulos is seeking to develop 2,800 acres of farmland and wildlife habitat near Roseville. To ease the uphill battle for approval, he has offered to donate 500 acres and a cash endowment for a private university to locate next to this land.

Environmentalists, predictably, have lambasted the idea as bad planning wrapped inside a "Trojan horse." The university ought to go in a more urban area, they argue. But the idea of developing this rural Placer acreage – whether a bad one or not – received some momentum from the prospect of bringing a new university to the Sacramento region. The value of the remaining 2,800 acres of adjacent Tsakopolous land wasn't hurt much by that prospect, either.

As part of their campaign for public opinion, the developers (as is common) are soliciting support from regional officials. Just one entity among this long list of potential lobbyists is West Sacramento's own Washington Unified School District.

Citing "a developer. . . who is willing to make land available in South Placer County for a regional university campus," the WUSD school board Sept. 13 stated that it "strongly supports the recruitment and siting of a four-year, private, regional university in Placer County." The school board supported the Tsakopolous proposal in all but name.

And that, ladies and gentlemen, is how a Yolo County school district gets into the position of making land use suggestions two counties away.

The board's position on this issue wasn't completely wrong; it's just that it should have limited its statement to a generalized comment on the need for a new regional university. It should have distanced itself from the specific Tsakopolous proposal. The Tsakopolous land use fight is none of our business.

You may remember when the shoe was on the other foot. For example, you might recall when various outside environmental groups and state agencies lobbies hard for West Sacramento to accept a massive paper recycling plant in order to serve the broader public need for recycling. Never mind the local impacts on West Sacramento's local air quality, water supply, sewage system or skyline, was their general viewpoint.

These things can cut in all directions – and given enough time, they do.

Seniors deserve better

Why do we have to increase the fares for the low income seniors that need transportation to the Senior Center for their lunch and social interaction? It is probably the only real meal they have for that day. This is defeating the main purpose of the nutrition program.

Think before acting

Thank you for the article about Mr. Lucas's over reaction and subsequent remorse. There is a truly important lesson here for us all in these times.

I believe that Mr. Lucas's actions can be taken as a mirror of our national state of mind. As a nation of individuals we are singly and collectively confused and in great distress. We are therefore capable of foolhardy action. The crucial point here is for us not to go off half-cocked either as citizens or as a nation. In the aftermath of an unimaginable horror, and in the face of a very real and unexpected threat, we have had neither time nor calm to adequately assess our situation or gauge our reactions. Angry ill-advised actions frequently bring about disastrous unintended results.

We cannot afford such results either as a nation or as individuals. Precipitous actions will not make us safe. We must proceed with due deliberation and with consideration for the results of our actions, not in the heat of the moment. Mr. Lucas could not hear what was being said to him nor comprehend the impact of his actions. We as a nation may well be embarking on a course of action that is just as poorly thought out. Certainly we must ensure the safety of our people. Surely we must bring the perpetrators to account. Absolutely we must work assiduously to end all terrorism. But these threats did not arise suddenly and there is nothing to be gained by reaction. In reacting we are simply playing into a course of behavior initiated and defined by those who committed this terrible act.

In defense of John Lucas

We need to put things in proper perspective. What John Lucas did at the Sikh Temple was wrong and a mistake. He has already been punished for this with five days in jail, has written an eloquent apology letter, and has offered to pay for the damages. To ruin a man, or destroy his family over one mistake is wrong. The damage that occurred was to the physical property of the Sikh community and that can be replaced and repaired.

What John did was not a hate crime, it was a case of zealous patriotism and a misunderstanding. He already has been punished for what he did.

Iced Tea with his cop killer album, that was a hate crime; burning a Jewish Synagogue is a hate crime; Dick Gephart accusing the Republicans of starving children, a total lie, is a hate crime; and Osama Bin Laden attacking the United States is a hate crime. We need things in proper perspective. We need to understand what is hate and what is a mistake. I will not stand by while John gets attacked and destroyed. It's not right, it's not proper, and it's not the American way.

John has spent five days in jail, that's punishment. He's offered to pay for all the damages, that's not only financial punishment, but it also makes the victims whole. And he has shown great remorse for his zealous patriotism. I also know John and he's a good, hard-working American who deserves fairness, compassion and a second chance.

We need to keep things in proper perspective when dealing with John Lucas and our national tragedy.

health care home" listed as one of its land zoning uses, and does not have a department of mental health; hence, our county has that authority and our city was outvoted 4-1 at the county level.

Add that land use to affordable housing and what is the most common response? "Not in my back yard (Nimby)." Respondents either feel uncomfortable or feel their property values will go seriously down if affordable housing or housing for those with mental problems are allowed to be built or rezoned nearby them.

It is time all counties and cities created a "Nimby" zoning classification. On that land there would be no taxes, no fees for city or county services. Nimby landowners would agree, in exchange, to allow anything and everything to be built or used on their land that nobody else wants. Rent controls and profit controls could be utilized to produce the right kind of affordable housing, be it for renters or for home purchasers. All the while we should insist that any development producing offensive noise or aromas be build downwind from homes, offices and the like. Even wall may be necessary to divert offensive winds and noises. Extra security will no doubt be required as we group together those whom most folks do not want living near them. Think about it. The Nimby incentive: Lower investment and lower income (rent). No backing out of long-term deals without first providing substitute low-income housing, including care for those with special problems.
